Seward, Alaska, Oct. 15.—While returning from a moose hunt in the region of Kenai lake, Howard B. Smith, the Norwalk, Conn., and Alfred Lowell, a pucker, were drowned.

William Weaver, a guide, narrowly escaped by swimming ashore. They were found on the beach, which would drift these, but pulled through them, causing them to quickly fill and capsize, throwing the occupants into the water.

Weaver told Mr. Smith, who was heavily clothed and unable to swim, to hang on to the boat, which would drift ashore, about 150 feet distant. Lowell, who was cast away from the boat by the waves, soon sank.

The boat unable to stand the weight of the two men, admonished Mr. Smith to throw the occupants into the water. When he reached the shore he saw nothing of Mr. Smith, although the body of the guide, Weaver, who was heavily clothed and unable to swim, was found on the beach.

Weaver went to the nearest cabin and secured help. They rigged temporary grappling hooks and recovered the bodies of the two men. Lowell's body was not recovered. An inquest is being held at the home of the guide, Weaver, who is not here at present. The body has been examined and is to be sent to Norway.

Mr. Smith's hunt was successful, as he had secured two large moose. His death was entirely accidental, and Guide Weaver did his utmost to save Mr. Smith from drowning. Both Weaver and Lowell are old-time residents of this section. Lowell being a son of one of the original settlers of Seward. Both were familiar with the waters of Kenai lake and both were recognized as good boatmen.

The above letter was received by The Bulletin Saturday morning in response to a query sent to Seward asking for details of the drowning of Mr. Smith.

Saturday morning there was also received a telegram from Mr. A. McNeely, who is proprietor of the hotel at Seward, in which it was stated that about $100 had been found in the suit about Mr. Smith, which was carried by him, and this set at rest any thought of foul play. It was further stated that the body of Lowell started on the boat leaving Sunday and the hunting equipment of Mr. Smith was found on the boat.

It is believed Mr. Smith's interests have been well looked after in Seward, and the river possible was done for him while the water and afterwards.

The guide, William Weaver, was killed by the accident. The accident, it is believed, was not considered necessary. It is believed Mr. Smith stopped the rough water program of Mr. Lowell, who sent the first telegram here.

While in Seward and before leaving for his hunting, Mr. Smith had sent a postal to A. E. Grimes, with whom he had been hunting, and made one or two hunting trips, to the point that he intended to return home by way of Canada and was to stop in

OBITUARY.

David K. Hubbard.

After a serious illness of ten days' duration, Daniel K. Hubbard passed away Saturday afternoon at 12:30 o'clock at his late home, No. 230 West Main street, aged 80 years, and death came from a general breaking down of his system.

Mr. Hubbard was born in Seymour and Sophronia Hubbard of Windham, Vt. where he was born on June 11, 1830. He had been married to Mrs. Hubbard for 50 years.

When about 15 years of age he left Windham to go to Lowell, Mass., where he entered a machine shop. Subsequently he worked in shops in Boston, Mass., Worcester and Pittsburg.

On Oct. 7, 1858, he married Miss Margaret Hubbard, daughter of Everett and Susan R. Sprague, of Pittsburg, Mass. Following his marriage, Mr. Hubbard worked in Pittsburg, Chicago and in Springfield, Ill., for several years.

Since 1862 Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard have resided in the Smith-Grasson shop before coming to Norwich.
